Pearle* develops map to track re-opening of Live Performance in Europe

The screenshot shows the Pearle* website interface. On the left, there is a navigation menu with a search bar and a list of performance re-opening dates and audience limits for various European countries. The main content area displays a map of Europe with colored markers indicating the status of live performance re-opening in each country. The markers are color-coded: orange for countries with specific dates and audience limits, and green for countries with no information yet.

Based on information provided by its members, Pearle* - the European federation of music, performing arts and live performance organisations - has put together a map to visualize the re-opening of Live Performance in Europe.

As the map shows the situation differs from country to country, with some countries allowing already performances for a small number of audience, whilst some countries haven't announced any date yet regarding re-opening of venues.

Insofar as possible the map also provides information regarding a countries' rule on people allowed in a venue or for outdoor performances. One can observe from this information that there is no common approach between countries on this matter.

Whilst Pearle* members acknowledge the specific health prevention conditions and adhere to those, the live performance sector aims to open on the basis of full capacity. Without this possibility the costs are disproportionate with the limited box office income. In this case they call upon governments to compensate such losses.

The map can be accessed here.

The map will be continuously updated according to information received.
