Call for applications for the 5th Land Art Mongolia. We seek applications from emerging and mid-career artists, experience in environmental art is requested. The program is designed to pursue personal creative work and share in collegial interaction within a small community of Mongolian and international artists.

During the Biennial production invited artists are accommodated in traditional gers located in a rural mountains setting and nomadic family neighbours, about 5 km away of a little village Murun Sum and about 4 hours from the capital Ulaanbaatar.

The professional ger camp provides bathroom and shower, kitchen, and studio. Artists are expected to interact with the environment of the nature. (installation, performance, earth art, concept, etc.)

A documentary exhibition of the realized works will be presented at the Biennial venues of Ulaanbaatar. The exhibition will be completed by a publication and a one-day symposium in the Academy of Science.

WHO ARE WE NOW?

5th Land Art Mongolia

July 30th – August 25th 2018

Curator: Lewis Biggs

Globalisation can be understood specifically as an attack on cultures that are close to 'nature', or that continue to respect the values implicit in 'nature'. What are these values? The attitude that humanity shares a delicately balanced habitat with other animals, and that the entire ecology deserves our respect. It is a holistic outlook, advocating sustainable rather than exploitative approaches to resources. This attitude, these 'natural' values, were present in early Humanism. What went wrong?

The balance between city-dwellers and rural populations tipped in the direction of urbanism. More of the world's population is resident in cities than in the countryside, and this process continues to accelerate. It means that fewer and fewer people understand or value the complex and dynamic ecology of 'nature' as a set of values or a philosophical model. But urbanisation is only evidence of a more massive change both in the history of 'humanity' and in the history of 'nature'.
