Bangkok International Film Festival

The Bangkok International Film Festival has been held annually since 2003 by the Tourism Authority of Thailand, a Royal Thai Government agency, in Bangkok, Thailand.

The festival showcases more than a hundred of feature and short films, representing some of the best in the current international cinema through its various program sections. The festival offers over a hundred short films each year. Through its various programme sections, Bangkok film festival is representing some of the best in the current international cinema.

The festival focuses on the works by emerging filmmakers throughout Asia, and in particular those of the Southeast Asian region.

The Golden Kinnaree Awards are judged in the three competition categories by a panel of international jury.

Running concurrently with the festival are also a number of sidebar events such as panel discussions, workshops, master classes, exhibitions as well as the Bangkok Film Market.
